

The DATING PASSPORT

For Safe, Smart, Successful Dating

SUMMARY: Online dating is so acceptable now that 1 in 8 marriages originates online. Yet there are risks. Because of online anonymity, over 50% of dating profiles are false and being used for scams, cons, and crimes done in the name of love. A new patent pending system by The Dating Passport is a bold, new ID verification service, which provides real and continuous dating security. It empowers singles with certified identities before they become involved with virtual strangers.

ONLINE DATING SAFETY. . . Who Are They Really?

Imagine This: Awakened by morning sunlight streaming through your window—your first thought today was a single, stunning realization. No, it wasn't a nightmare. The man in bed next to you is not the man you married. He is a complete stranger with a fabricated persona.

Deborah Nelson of Colorado Springs, CO, knows first-hand the shock of this terrifying scenario and is helping prevent it from happening to others. In her true story, "Oops, I married a Con Artist," Nelson proves that now, more than ever, singles need to know the identity of the people they are dating. And Nelson has invented a proactive, non-invasive dating safety tool to do just this.

Ms. Nelson introduces the internet's most comprehensive identity verification service called "The Dating Passport," (patent pending). Through its website, <http://www.thedatingpassport.com>, the company provides a valuable security system to protect singles meeting virtual strangers from scams, cons, and criminals hiding behind fraudulent dating profiles.

An international conference held in Toronto concluded that an Internet identification system is critical to stemming online fraud. The Dating Passport offers the solution for millions of people dating online. The patent pending system provides a convenient, continuous, non-invasive alternative to the traditional one at a time, more expensive background check.

For an annual fee of about than the cost of one special date, The Dating Passport (patent pending) certifies its members identities through a secure voluntary online application. When Dating Passport members want to verify each other's identities, they agree to exchange Dating Passport Numbers. The annual fee covers members by continuously giving access for exchanging dating ID, and members have the security of knowing whom they are dating. Marital status, and other "datability factors" are verified, which are critical to know at the beginning of a relationship. The Dating Passport also includes a photo verification option to guard members against being drawn in by fake dating profile photos.

"If you are involved with a Dating Passport Member, you know who they are," said Nelson. "In this world of easy online anonymity, The Dating Passport is the only safe dating tool available; it offers continuous protection against the devastation of relationship fraud. Dating Passport holders have volunteered their identity information and have nothing to hide."

The Dating Passport (patent pending) is issued from the Web site, <http://www.thedatingpassport.com>. A free copy of Nelson's story, "Oops, I Married a Con Artist," can also be obtained on the site.

Deborah Nelson is writing a book entitled "Oops, I Married a Con Artist —and Successful Dating Wisdom in the 21st Century." She may be contacted through agent, Gwen Ellis, mgewrites@verizon.net or directly at (719) 471 6503 x 4.
